A: From what I remember, the Nexus 7 runs a "Kernel" that has a bug where it will not start if the screen is off when the bootloader loads. In order to fix this you have to remove the system to factory defaults, and then re-flash the recovery (without bootloader) so it will reset the system to the latest version of the CM kernel - which will not affect the bootloader and will stay present after a re-flash. I have done this several times, and it works every time for me. I don't know how to setup the recovery without the bootloader (or how to reflash using recovery without the bootloader). NOTE: It is very important that when you reflash the recovery that you go into: Settings > Backup & Reset > Factory Data Reset > Delete all user data (including your apps) (By default it will be set to Delete all user data) > Hit "back" > Mass Storage Then instead of the "Reboot" button choose "Safely Remove" (NOT BRICK). If you accidentally brick your device instead of getting back to the bootloader, you can restore from Android's built in Backup & Restore (thanks to wizmaker for pointing this out) If you brick the device, you can get a fix from here: If you have a rooted device, look here This fix includes both the 1.4.1 lollipop update and the 1.4.3 h3 update. Fighters from the Islamic State group are believed to be preparing to carry out an attack in Europe, a senior Estonian security official has told Reuters. "They are planning to attack somewhere in Europe, probably on the territory of Russia. This will be an attempt to provoke Russia into conflict," Viktor Ivanov, the Interior Ministry's chief of counter-terrorism, said. Ivanov did not provide further details about the planned attack, or say who might be responsible, but said: "It is not the norm that terrorism has a global focus. This is usually a local issue." He added: "They want to provoke Russia into responding militarily. We are monitoring this matter closely, as is our duty." Turkish PM Tayyip Erdogan has said a record number of jihadists have left the
